The Ashburton territory has a significant Tagalog-speaking population with publishers and Bible students who depend on the language for spiritual instruction and progress. There is a stable and spiritually mature core of fluent publishers, including appointed brothers, capable of providing shepherding and caring for congregation responsibilities. The field has demonstrated sustained growth and continued disciple-making potential, making it appropriate to strengthen the arrangement by forming a congregation.

6. List the existing congregations directly involved in this proposal, namely, those whose territory boundaries are affected or the congregation that has been hosting a group now being recommended as a new congregation. (If more lines are needed, list the additional congregations on page 2.)

INSTRUCTIONS

Fill out a Congregation Application/Information (S-51) form for the new congregation being recommended and for each existing congregation involved in the proposal, as follows:

- Fill out the entire form (points 1-8) for the new congregation being recommended. Leave the space for the congregation number blank.
- Fill in only points 1-4 for each existing congregation directly involved in the proposal, namely, those whose territory boundaries are affected or the congregation that has been hosting a group now being recommended as a new congregation.
- Fill in only point 1 for each existing congregation whose only change will be its name.

Congregations requesting a name change not in conjunction with the formation of a new congregation should fill in only point 1. In such a case, the form need only be signed by the Congregation Service Committee.

Congregation name: A congregation's name should reflect its territory assignment. Each congregation's complete name is made up of three distinct parts: (1) a directional or other geographic designation (street, park, neighborhood, etc.), (2) a city in the congregation's territory, and (3) the province or state that city is in. This applies to all congregations, even the first congregation in a city. For example, if the first congregation in the city of Bath, Maine, has in its territory a principal street called "Hamilton Boulevard," the congregation may propose that its complete name be "Hamilton Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Bath, Maine." (Note: Any directional or geographic names chosen must refer to the city in the congregation's complete name, not a neighboring city in the congregation's territory. The name of the city should not be used as the first part of the congregation's complete name.)

When a second congregation is formed in a city where previously there was just one, the original congregation's name will not automatically be changed. However, the original congregation should request permission to change its name if its current name will no longer reflect a meaningful portion of its new territory assignment. It may also request permission to change its name if the first part of its current complete name is only a language and another congregation of that same language is being formed in that city. For example, if a second English congregation in Smithtown, New York, is formed and the existing congregation named "English Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Smithtown, New York" will now be covering the northern half of the city, it may request permission to change its name to "North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Smithtown, New York." Or, if in the original congregation's territory there is a park called "Mason Park," the congregation may request permission to change its name to "Mason Park Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Smithtown, New York."

In all cases where the primary language of a congregation is different from the principal language of the country, the language must be included in the first part of the congregation's complete name. However, even where there is only one foreign-language congregation in a city, the language should be prefaced by a directional or other geographic designation. For example, if the first Spanish congregation in the city of Bath, Maine, has in its territory a principal street called "Hamilton Boulevard," the congregation may propose that its complete name be "Hamilton Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Bath, Maine." If in due course a second Spanish congregation is formed in the city, the guidelines in the previous paragraph would apply.

If the reason for the name chosen is not clearly identifiable on the map provided to the branch office, please provide a brief explanation of why the name is appropriate. The complete name of a congregation (including the three principal parts described above) should always be used when corresponding with the branch office, designing letterheads, opening bank accounts, filing exemption applications, and so forth.
